Here is the forecast for the United Kingdom until dawn tomorrow:
While the far west and southeast and much of northern Scotland will have a fine sunny morning, elsewhere it will be a murky grey start, with some rain in the north. As the day goes on the rain will die out and the cloud will break allowing brightness in some further places. Thundery rain the in the south overnight.

Outlook for Thursday and Friday:

Thursday morning will see occasionally heavy rain in southern areas. The north of Scotland will also be wet, and there will be cloud on eastern coasts, but mainly sunny elsewhere. Friday will be mostly cloudy with some rain in central areas.
