Here is the forecast for the United Kingdom until dawn tomorrow:
A cloudy day across southern parts of the UK with further rain developing here through the afternoon. Elsewhere will be generally bright with some showers. Overnight, rain over southern parts will clear all but the south coast by dawn. Elsewhere, it will be chilly with some fog patches forming.

Outlook for Saturday and Sunday:
Generally fine for most on Saturday with some sunshine once any early fog has cleared. Rain possible at times near the south coast. Frost and fog returning in the north and east overnight. Dry and bright for most on Sunday, however heavy rain and strong winds returning across the southwest later.
