

Forecast For The United Kingdom
Issued by Met Office Exeter
at 0700 on Monday 26 Mar 2012

++ Valid for broadcast at 0858

Here is the forecast for the United Kingdom until dawn tomorrow:
Starting chilly, with areas of mist and fog, chiefly in parts of eastern England and the Scottish Lowlands. It will soon become fine across the UK, with many seeing unbroken warm sunshine and with the northeast again becoming exceptionally warm. Overnight, it will remain clear allowing the temperature to fall away once more to give a slight frost in places.

Outlook for Tuesday and Wednesday:

Both days will be predominantly dry and fine, with further warm and largely unbroken spring sunshine after any early mist and fog patches clear. It may feel a little cooler in parts of the far southwest, with brisk easterly winds.

(C) Crown Copyright 2012. Published by the Met Office.