++ Valid for broadcast at 0858

Here is the forecast for the United Kingdom until dawn tomorrow:
Cloud and rain in the southeast will slowly clear. Elsewhere, there will be sunny spells, but scattered showers in the west will spread eastwards to affect most parts, some of which will be heavy with a risk of thunder. Showers will be most frequent in the northwest. Overnight, showers will gradually become confined to western areas.

Outlook for Monday and Tuesday:

Sunny spells and further scattered showers are expected on Monday and Tuesday. These will be most frequent in the north and west, where they may once again be heavy and thundery at times. Showers will tend to ease away overnight.
