++ Valid for broadcast at 0858

Here is the forecast for the United Kingdom until dawn tomorrow:
Any early morning mist will soon lift to give some very warm sunshine. Showers will develop though and these will be torrential in places, with the risk of hail and thunder into the afternoon and evening. The heavy showers will continue in places for a time tonight. They will ease during the early hours for many, with some mist developing.

Outlook for Wednesday and Thursday:
Wednesday will start largely dry and bright. Heavy and perhaps thundery showers will develop through the day, mainly towards western parts and the southeast corner. Thursday will then be largely warm and sunny but with scattered showers developing later on.
