Here is the forecast for the United Kingdom until dawn tomorrow:

A band of showers and rain across western parts of the UK at first, heavy at times, will spread gradually eastwards, though become increasingly fragmented. Elsewhere, a scattering of showers, but remaining mostly dry, fine and warm in the southeast. Overnight, becoming drier in the north, but further showery rain will spread across many southern areas.

Outlook for Saturday and Sunday:

Showery rain in the south on Saturday will spread northwards, heavy at times. Best of any sunshine across Scotland, Northern Ireland, and later the south and southeast of England. Heavy rain in the north on Sunday, clearing from the south later.
