

Forecast For The United Kingdom
Issued by Met Office Exeter
at 0700 on Sunday 02 May 2010

++ Valid for broadcast at 0858

Here is the forecast for the United Kingdom until dawn tomorrow:
Occasionally heavy rain across southern England will slowly move eastwards to clear the far southeast by evening. Scotland and Northern Ireland generally cloudy at first with occasional outbreaks of rain, this gradually moving southwards across Wales and western England overnight. Elsewhere, the odd shower is possible, but mainly staying dry with some clear spells today and overnight.

Outlook for Monday and Tuesday:

Monday will be a day of broken sunshine and scattered showers for many places, with more extensive, though generally light, rain reaching northern Scotland during the afternoon. Tuesday often cloudy with intermittent rain in the north, but some good sunny spells further south.

(C) Crown Copyright 2010. Published by the Met Office.