++ Valid for broadcast at 0858

Here is the forecast for the United Kingdom until dawn tomorrow:
A cloudy day, with mist and fog patches in southern England and Wales. It'll be brighter in the north and parts of the east, but will feel very cold again, apart from in the far south-west. It'll turn mostly cloudy overnight, and less cold than previous nights.

Outlook for Tuesday and Wednesday:
Tuesday will be dry, but also cloudy with hill fog for much of the UK. The north and west of Scotland however, will be affected by rain and strong winds. It'll turn increasingly mild on Wednesday, with a brisk south-westerly breeze and outbreaks of rain in the west.
