++ Valid for broadcast at 0858

Here is the forecast for the United Kingdom until dawn tomorrow:
A largely fine and bright day with plenty of long sunny spells. Out of the wind in the longer spells of sunshine it will feel pleasantly warm, with highs of 16 degrees Celsius (61 F). The cloud will thicken early evening with heavy and persistent rain arriving late evening. With the thick cloud and rain it will stay mild though.

Outlook for Tuesday and Wednesday:

The rain will clear to the north through the morning with decent sunny spells to follow. Blustery heavy showers and the risk of gales will arrive from midday though. Windy with some sunny spells and heavy, possibly thundery showers Wednesday.
