++ Valid for broadcast at 0858

Here is the forecast for the United Kingdom until dawn tomorrow:
Frequent heavy blustery showers and sunny spells will affect the west from the start of today and spread eastwards during the morning. There will be some brighter drier weather in the south-west later. Showers will gradually die out overnight, though some will continue in Scotland. Cloud, rain and drizzle will encroach into the far south-west later in the night.

Outlook for Sunday and Monday:
Sunday will be largely dry and bright with lighter winds, though patchy cloud and light rain will affect southern England for a time. There will be some showers in Scotland and Northern Ireland. Monday will be cloudy, with more heavy showers.
