Here is the forecast for the United Kingdom until dawn tomorrow:
High pressure over the UK will continue to bring settled, often bright conditions. The south-west and north-east will see the best of the sunshine. It will be windy across northern Scotland with some light rain. Where there are clear skies overnight we could see a touch of frost, however some places will remain cloudy.

Outlook for Friday and Saturday:

After some early mist and fog patches on Friday there will be some good sunny spells for many. It will remain breezy in the far north with some light rain. Saturday looks like another fine day, and it will feel quite warm, especially in the sunshine.
