A very unsettled day is expected across the UK. It will be extremely windy in Scotland with damaging storm force winds likely. It will also be very windy elsewhere, especially over exposed western coasts. To accompany this, persistent and often heavy rain will affect most places, even falling as snow over the Scottish mountains.

Outlook for Friday and Saturday:
Winds will slowly ease through Friday and Saturday. Showers are likely in the north and west, often falling as snow, even to lower levels at times. Elsewhere it will feel cold but will be mainly dry with sunny spells. Widespread overnight frosts are very likely.
