

Forecast For The United Kingdom
Issued by Met Office Exeter
at 0700 on Wednesday 05 Mar 2014

++ Valid for broadcast at 0858

Here is the forecast for the United Kingdom until dawn tomorrow:
There will be outbreaks of rain for northern and western parts. It should stay dry in the south and east with some sunshine during the morning, before turning cloudier through the day. Further rain is expected in the northwest overnight, although the far north of Scotland should be dry with clear spells, as will southern and eastern UK.

Outlook for Thursday and Friday:

More rain over northern and western parts on Thursday. Elsewhere it will be largely cloudy with occasional light rain, and the best of any sunshine in the southeast, where it will be mild. The rain will weaken and move south through Friday.
