Here is the forecast for the United Kingdom until dawn tomorrow:
Mist and fog may linger in eastern Scotland but otherwise it will be dry and sunny across the UK. In western areas the sun will be a little hazy as high cloud gradually moves in, while in the northeast there will be some fair-weather cloud. Once again, very warm.

Outlook for Sunday and Monday:
Sunday will continue the warm and dry theme for most but western parts of Northern Ireland and Scotland will be cloudier and cooler, with some light rain in the afternoon. Monday sees the rain in the north become heavier, and other western parts of the UK becoming cloudier and wetter.
