Here is the forecast for the United Kingdom until dawn tomorrow:
Rain, heavy in the west, will spread eastwards through the day to affect all but northeastern Scotland, where some sunny spells are likely. It will become windy in the south, which will take the edge off the relatively mild temperatures. Overnight it will turn mostly dry before further rain arrives in the southwest by dawn.

Outlook for Friday and Saturday:

On Friday wet and windy weather will again sweep eastwards with some heavy rain. Sunny spells may follow the rain in the west by dusk with blustery showers likely in the northwest. Saturday will then also be rather wet and windy with further rain.
