Here is the forecast for the United Kingdom until dawn tomorrow:
Early rain and winds across northern Scotland will soon ease. A fine and sunny day then follows for all, with only light winds. However it will soon turn cold overnight, with a patchy frost developing. Although cloud, outbreaks of rain, and stronger winds are then likely to spread into the southwest during the early hours.

Outlook for Wednesday and Thursday:
Wednesday will be rather cloudy with rain moving into western parts. It will also turn windy, especially across northwest Scotland. The best of the brighter spells will be in the east. Thursday will then stay rather cloudy for most, with some rain at times.
