Here is the forecast for the United Kingdom until dawn tomorrow:
Breezy, but dry with sunny spells in the northwest and southeast, cloudy in northeastern areas. Rain in the southwest will move into central areas, followed by sunny spells. A cloudy and frost-free night for most with winds easing. Some light rain on-and-off for some, and steady heavy rain later for the southwest.

Outlook for Wednesday and Thursday:

Less cold Wednesday but rather cloudy for most, with many areas seeing some rain on-and-off for a time. Cloudy with limited sunshine; perhaps some isolated spells of light rain in the west. Temperatures on the mild side, but chilly in the south where fog is slow to clear.
