++ Valid for broadcast at 0858

Here is the forecast for the United Kingdom until dawn tomorrow:
Fine and dry to start for many, with warm sunny spells, especially across central and eastern parts. Cloudier further west with scattered showers, perhaps heavy at times, gradually spreading eastwards. Many southeastern parts will remain dry. Thicker cloud with showery rain likely to spread into southwestern parts overnight.

Outlook for Wednesday and Thursday:

An area of showery rain, heavy at times, is likely to spread northeastwards across all parts during Wednesday, turning breezy for a time. Drier and brighter conditions, with some warm sunny spells but also scattered showers will follow later and into Thursday.
