Here is the forecast for the United Kingdom until dawn tomorrow:
A cloudy and windy day today with prolonged spells of rain through the morning. After a brief drier spell, further showers, sometimes wintry further north, will move south-eastwards overnight. It will be a mild start to the day, but turn colder later with frost possible for many areas overnight.

Outlook for Wednesday and Thursday:
Cold and very unsettled weather is expected on Wednesday, with frequent blustery, wintry and occasionally heavy showers for all areas, accompanied by strong winds, with gales possible for western and southern parts. Thursday will be more settled than Wednesday, with lighter winds, but staying cold with occasional showers.
