Here is the forecast for the United Kingdom until dawn tomorrow:
After a damp and cloudy start, rain will soon start to clear to eastwards, leaving only some scattered showers. It will become brighter, with sunny spells developing from the west across most places, and it feel pleasantly warm where any breaks occur. It will be a little on the breezy side for many.

Outlook for Saturday and Sunday:

Saturday will be rather cloudy with outbreaks of rain, heavy at times, in the north and west. Southern and eastern parts will be drier with some warm sunny spells, and it will feel humid. Turning cooler and fresher on Sunday, with a mixture of sunshine and showers.
