

Forecast For The United Kingdom
Issued by Met Office Exeter
at 0700 on Friday 02 Mar 2012

++ Valid for broadcast at 0858

Here is the forecast for the United Kingdom until dawn tomorrow:
Mist or fog patches should slowly clear through the morning with sunny spells developing. There may be some outbreaks of rain at first in the northwest. Southeast England will become cloudy in the afternoon, with cloud spreading across the UK overnight, giving some light drizzle. Heavier rain will move across western parts of the UK later in the night.

Outlook for Saturday and Sunday:

Outbreaks of rain in the west will move eastwards, clearing during the afternoon to leave clearer conditions with blustery showers. Rain on Sunday may be heavy in the south at times with a risk of sleet or snow in the north later.

(C) Crown Copyright 2012. Published by the Met Office.