Here is the forecast for the United Kingdom until dawn tomorrow:
Southern and northern parts of the UK will have a largely bright start with some sunshine, although northern Scotland will be very windy. However, central areas, are likely to be cloudy with some light rain. This cloud, with sporadic outbreaks of drizzle will reach southeast England this evening, before largely clearing through the early hours, with generally fine conditions otherwise.

Outlook for Wednesday and Thursday:

It will remain generally fine and dry across England and Wales with plenty of pleasantly warm sunshine. It is likely to be somewhat cloudier across Scotland and Northern Ireland with outbreaks of rain, and also some strong winds on Thursday.
