Here is the forecast for the United Kingdom until dawn tomorrow:
After a chilly start with some patchy frost and fog, many will have a fine day with long spells of increasingly warm sunshine. However, across the north and west it will be cloudier and cooler with outbreaks of light and patchy rain affecting western Scotland.

Outlook for Saturday and Sunday:

The weekend will remain fine for most with plenty of sunshine developing across the country. In the sunshine it will become warm, especially in the south-east on Sunday, although some coasts will be cooler. In contrast, northern and western parts will turn cloudier with outbreaks of rain slowly moving southwards.
