Here is the forecast for the United Kingdom until dawn tomorrow:
Dry with sunny spells in eastern England and southern Scotland this morning.
Further north and west it will be cloudier, with some rain and drizzle on hills.
This afternoon there will be more persistent rain in Northern Ireland, and in the early evening heavier rain moves into southwest England, moving eastwards overnight. Mild, and becoming windy.

Outlook for Thursday and Friday:

Heavy rain in Scotland and far southeast England clearing Thursday morning, followed by widespread heavy showers, merging into rain in southeast England later. Continuing mild and windy. Friday will have lighter winds but staying showery, with slow-moving showers bringing prolonged rain to some areas.
