++ Valid for broadcast at 0858

Here is the forecast for the United Kingdom until dawn tomorrow:
Rain will move across Northern Ireland and western Scotland, turning heavy at times with a risk of thunder. Heavy, thundery showers will also affect parts of England and Wales through the day. It will be warm for many and become hot in parts of eastern England. Further outbreaks of rain will move east overnight, introducing fresher conditions to the west.

Outlook for Thursday and Friday:

Showery rain will slowly clear eastern areas on Thursday with a drier and brighter and fresher interlude following. There will be a fresher feel across all parts by Friday with some persistent rain for a time, followed some blustery showers.
