++ Valid for broadcast at 0858

Here is the forecast for the United Kingdom until dawn tomorrow:
Any fog will clear through the morning to leave a largely dry day with sunny spells although it will turn breezier through the afternoon. Rain across southwestern areas by the evening will push northeastwards overnight, with wet and windy weather across much of England and Wales by dawn. It will stay drier but turn colder across northern areas.

Outlook for Monday and Tuesday:

Wet and windy weather will push north across all parts on Monday with drier conditions following, but it will stay windy and mostly cloudy with scattered heavy showers. Winds will remain strong into Tuesday with further rain or showers across the UK.
