++ Valid for broadcast at 0858

Here is the forecast for the United Kingdom until dawn tomorrow:
There will be a few showers initially, but for most it will be a dry start with sunny spells developing. By the afternoon showers will become more frequent, heavy and possibly thundery. It will feel warm and humid, especially in the southeast. Heavy, thundery downpours will gradually clear all but the north of Scotland and Northern Ireland overnight.

Outlook for Tuesday and Wednesday:

Tuesday will see sunshine and further scattered heavy, and perhaps thundery showers, especially in the northwest. Many southeastern areas will remain dry and sunny. Wednesday will be drier and more settled generally, although a few showers may persist in the northwest.
