++ Valid for broadcast at 0858

Here is the forecast for the United Kingdom until dawn tomorrow:
Patchy fog, locally dense across England will gradually clear, then many places will be rather cloudy. Rain across Scotland and Northern Ireland will spread southwards, but will mostly die out as it does so. Sunnier skies will follow the rain to all but southern areas by evening. Tonight, cloud in the south clearing, then dry.

Outlook for Tuesday and Wednesday:

Most places will have plenty of dry weather with bright or sunny spells, the best of the sunshine for the south and west. There will be a few showers for some northern and eastern areas, and here it will be rather breezy.
