Here is the forecast for the United Kingdom until dawn tomorrow:
Showers, some heavy, are expected across parts of southeastern England and the extreme southwest. Elsewhere, showers will die out to leave a largely dry and sunny day with light winds. A cold, clear night will follow for many, with patchy frost and fog, however, it will become wet and windy across western parts of the UK by dawn.

Outlook for Thursday and Friday:

Rain, heavy at times, and strong winds will slowly spread across the UK on Thursday, reaching all but the far southeast of England by evening. It will stay windy on Friday with rain gradually clearing to a mixture of sunshine and showers.
