Here is the forecast for the United Kingdom until dawn tomorrow:

A dry, sunny and very warm day. Parts of East Anglia and the southeast may be cloudier however, as well as northwest Scotland. Isolated heavy showers could develop in the north during the afternoon. A generally dry, fine and warm night, however cloud and occasional light rain in the northwest will spread south into Northern Ireland and southwest Scotland.

Outlook for Saturday and Sunday:

Mainly dry and sunny this weekend. It will feel hot in the southern half of the UK, particularly on Saturday, although with a risk of isolated thundery showers. The northwest will be cloudier with some light rain or drizzle at times.
