Here is the forecast for the United Kingdom until dawn tomorrow:
Much of Scotland will see a rather cloudy day with further showers, and the odd shower may develop elsewhere across northern Britain. Further south after a chilly start it will be a dry day with plenty of sunshine. Tonight a few showers will continue in Scotland, but elsewhere we will see a dry, chilly night with largely clear skies.

Outlook for Monday and Tuesday:

It will be largely dry on Monday and Tuesday, although on Monday scattered showers are possible, mainly in central and eastern areas. With plenty of sunshine it will feel pleasantly warm by day, but clear skies will follow giving chilly nights.
