Here is the forecast for the United Kingdom until dawn tomorrow:
A fairly cloudy and cool day with occasional sunny spells. Southeast England, Northern Ireland and Scotland may see some showery rain though elsewhere staying mainly dry. Overnight, showery rain will spread to England and Wales whilst drier and clearer weather arrives from the north, with perhaps a touch of frost possible here.

Outlook for Saturday and Sunday:

Apart from some early rain in the south of England on Saturday morning, a predominantly dry day with plenty of sunny spells is expected. Winds will be light inland but noticeably breezy around the coasts. Sunday too looks fine and mainly dry with occasional sunny spells.
