Here is the forecast for the United Kingdom until dawn tomorrow:
Rather cloudy today but with a few sunny spells. Dry for most, aside from a few light showers in the west. Persistent rain developing in the far northwest later. Windy across northern areas. Tonight will be cloudy and breezy for most. Remaining windy in the north with rain in the northwest. Elsewhere, largely dry and frost free.

Outlook for Wednesday and Thursday:
Becoming windy with gales possible in all parts by Wednesday evening, perhaps severe gales around exposed coasts. Rain in the west, but drier further south and east. Becoming drier during Thursday morning, then cold and windy with blustery snow showers in the north.
