++ Valid for broadcast at 0858

Here is the forecast for the United Kingdom until dawn tomorrow:
Windy with rain for many today, with heavier spells shifting from southern UK at first to the north by the afternoon, with the eastern Britain driest and brightest throughout. Continuing mild but breezy overnight, with the east largely dry, however many western areas will see further rain, heaviest in northwestern UK with heavy spells here until dawn.

Outlook for Wednesday and Thursday:

A north-south split developing, with dry, warm and sunny weather in the south in easing winds, whereas the north retains wet and windy weather for a time, especially in western Scotland, although this later eases and retreats to the far north by Thursday.
