

Forecast For The United Kingdom
Issued by Met Office Exeter
at 0700 on Saturday 08 Nov 2014

++ Valid for broadcast at 0858

Here is the forecast for the United Kingdom until dawn tomorrow:
Squally rain across Wales and southwest England at first, will move northeastwards across the Midlands, northern England and then probably southern Scotland. The rain heavy at times with surface water. Sunshine and showers elsewhere. The rain will move across east and southeast England this evening and overnight. Otherwise, showers in the west but clear spells inland, and turning quite chilly.

Outlook for Sunday and Monday:
Rain in parts of East Anglia and far southeast will gradually clear on Sunday.
Otherwise, plenty of dry and bright weather, but also showers, heaviest and most frequent in the west. Rain spreading from the west later Monday and overnight.
