++ Valid for broadcast at 0858

Here is the forecast for the United Kingdom until dawn tomorrow:
A rather cloudy and dull start with hill fog and outbreaks of light rain in places. However, through the day it will turn drier and brighter with some sunny spells developing. Further cloud and rain is then likely to spread into northern and western parts overnight, but elsewhere should remain mostly dry.

Outlook for Thursday and Friday:

A breezy day on Thursday with outbreaks of rain in places. Turning drier across many parts later with some spells of sunshine developing. By Friday it should become largely fine and increasingly warm. However the far northwest is likely to remain rather cloudy with some light rain.
