++ Valid for broadcast at 0858

Here is the forecast for the United Kingdom until dawn tomorrow:
Dry for most with sunny spells in the south, best of the sunshine in the south-west. Cloudier elsewhere with some sunny intervals. A little light rain is possible over north-western hills with isolated showers also possible in the south-east later. Some clear spells overnight which could lead to a local frost. There'll be further light rain possible in the north-west.

Outlook for Thursday and Friday:

Thursday and Friday will be dry for most with variable cloud and sunny spells, the best of which towards the south and south-west. It will be cloudier in the north with some patchy rain possible in the north-west on Thursday.
