++ Valid for broadcast at 0858

Here is the forecast for the United Kingdom until dawn tomorrow:
Most areas will see some sunshine today, although there will also be plenty of showers which may also be heavy and thundery. The showers will die out in most areas this evening to leave a generally dry night though. There will be clear spells and some frost will form, chiefly in the north.

Outlook for Sunday and Monday:
It will be largely dry on Sunday with light winds and sunny spells. After a chilly start it will feel pleasantly warm in the sunshine too. Rain will then move into the northwest on Monday, but elsewhere it will be warm and sunny.
