Here is the forecast for the United Kingdom until dawn tomorrow:
Tuesday will be a warm and bright day for most with sunny spells in places.
Showers, mainly in the northwest at first, will spread eastwards through the day becoming more isolated during the afternoon, and fading away this evening to leave clear spells for a time. However, cloud will thicken in the northwest with some light rain arriving by dawn.

Outlook for Wednesday and Thursday:

A Northwest/southeast split will develop on Wednesday with cloudier conditions for Scotland, Northern Ireland and northern England with some light rain. Brighter for the rest of England and Wales with sunshine. Warm on Thursday with sunshine away from eastern coasts.
