Here is the forecast for the United Kingdom until dawn tomorrow :
A very mild but cloudy day is expected with outbreaks of rain spreading north across all areas, the rain heavy at times in the west. England and Wales should become generally dry this afternoon with perhaps some bright or even sunny intervals although drizzle is likely on windward coasts and hills in the west. It'll become windy again in the west with gales in places by dusk.

Outlook for Tuesday and Wednesday:
Continuing very mild but unsettled and windy with further rain at times, some heavy and prolonged with localised flooding likely especially in the south and west.
