++ Valid for broadcast at 0858

Here is the forecast for the United Kingdom until dawn tomorrow:
In the south there will be occasional showers, some heavy. Meanwhile patchy rain will affect eastern and central Scotland with murky conditions around northeast coasts. Elsewhere it should be drier with bright intervals once the morning fog patches slowly clear. The rain should largely clear overnight with some further fog patches forming.

Outlook for Thursday and Friday:

A band of rain is set to move eastwards on Thursday, turning occasionally heavy in the north and west. Some bright spells are possible in the east, where rain amounts will be small. Friday is also looking unsettled with wet and windy conditions for many.
