++ Valid for broadcast at 0858

Here is the forecast for the United Kingdom until dawn tomorrow:
Fairly cloudy conditions will spread southwards across many southern parts this morning, with a few light showers possible. There should be more sunny spells in the north, but some showers are likely around northeast Scotland. Overnight it should stay dry, though clear spells in the north will allow for some frost and freezing fog to develop.

Outlook for Sunday and Monday:
There will be variable amounts of cloud on Sunday and Monday, so most places will get some decent sunny breaks. For many it will remain dry, though some light rain or drizzle is possible over Scotland, with isolated showers most likely towards the southeast.
