Here is the forecast for the United Kingdom until dawn tomorrow:
Fog will again be slow to clear, particularly in the Midlands and northern England with the south and west seeing more cloud with outbreaks of rain. Further North, most will see a fine, dry day before a band of rain moves across the UK overnight. Some fog patches may develop but will be less widespread than of late.

Outlook for Wednesday and Thursday:
Wednesday will be mostly cloudy with outbreaks of rain continuing in the north. Although brighter , some showers in the south, which may be thundery at times. Unsettled weather persists into Thursday with strengthening winds, though some brighter spells, especially in the southeast.
