++ Valid for broadcast at 0858

Here is the forecast for the United Kingdom until dawn tomorrow:
Most places will have a dry, warm day with sunny spells, although there may be some fog near North Sea coasts. Southwest England and Wales will be cloudier though with scattered showers, these moving into Northern Ireland and Northwest England overnight. Most other places will remain dry although there may be some low cloud and mist in the northeast.

Outlook for Friday and Saturday:

Many places will be cloudy at first on Friday with showers in Northern Ireland and parts of northern England and Scotland. Sunny periods are expected for many by afternoon though. Saturday will be fine and dry with sunny spells for most.
