

National Severe Weather Warning Service

Chief Forecasters Assessment

Cold air will move southeast across the UK on Sunday following a frontal system. Within the cold air frequent showers will form and push into western and southern parts of Scotland in particular, these showers falling primarily as snow above around 200 m with a mixture of hail, sleet and snow to lower levels. Accumulations of up to 5 cm of snow are possible around 200 m, with some temporary slushy accumulations below this, and accumulations of 10 cm or more possible above 400 m.

Icy stretches in association with the showers are also likely as well as difficult driving conditions due to strong winds and blowing snow.

The Met Office have issued a Yellow Warning of Snow and Ice

Valid from 11:40 on Sun, 07th Dec 2014 until 12:00 on Mon, 08th Dec 2014

Showers will affect Scotland for the rest of Sunday, overnight and into Monday morning. These showers will fall as snow, particularly above 200 m with a mixture of hail, sleet and snow to lower levels away from the west coast. Icy stretches are likely to form on untreated surfaces, particularly after dusk on Sunday. Hazardous driving conditions can be expected over higher routes with reduced visibilities and blowing snow.

Alert originally issued on Thursday to expand the area and include Ice as a dual warning with snow.
