++ Valid for broadcast at 0858

Here is the forecast for the United Kingdom until dawn tomorrow:
Southeastern parts of England will have a rather cloudy day with the odd spot of light rain possible. Elsewhere it will dry with prolonged sunny spells. However, overnight the damp and cloudy conditions will spread to much of England and later, eastern Wales. Otherwise it will be another clear and cold night, with fog patches forming once again.

Outlook for Monday and Tuesday:
Into the new week the cloud will continue to spread across much of the country, with the odd spot of light rain or drizzle possible anywhere. It will however, remain fairly mild and winds will be light on the whole.
