Here is the forecast for the United Kingdom until dawn tomorrow:
Staying mainly dry with sunshine across Scotland. It'll be a rather cloudy start elsewhere but sunny spells will develop, especially across the east where it'll feel much warmer than of late. Isolated heavy, thundery showers are possible in south and west, these easing through the evening, bringing a mild night for all but the far north.

Outlook for Sunday and Monday:
Sunday and Monday will bring prolonged sunny spells with any early cloud quickly burning back to the coasts. Isolated heavy, thundery showers are likely in western and southern parts of the UK, spreading into northern England on Monday. Staying warm and humid throughout.
