

Forecast For The United Kingdom
Issued by Met Office Exeter
at 0700 on Monday 08 Sep 2008

++ Valid for broadcast at 0858

Here is the forecast for the United Kingdom until dawn tomorrow:
There will be a lot of cloud around today, although much of it will be sufficiently thin to allow occasional sunshine through, especially in the east. Most places will be dry, although there will be isolated showers around, mainly in Scotland and northern England. This evening and tonight rain will spread across western areas but the east will remain dry.

Outlook for Tuesday and Wednesday:

On Tuesday locally heavy rain over western areas will move eastwards across the country, although southwestern parts may brighten up again later. Wet and windy in the north and west on Wednesday, although dry and bright further south and east.

(C) Crown Copyright 2008. Published by the Met Office.