Here is the forecast for the United Kingdom until dawn tomorrow:
After a bright start for most the showers in the west will be replaced by rain, locally heavy, later giving gales, locally severe on exposed coasts, come this evening. It will remain windy tonight, however the rain will clear eastwards leaving a damp end to the night in the south, some showers in the north and clearer spells in between.

Outlook for Tuesday and Wednesday:

Tuesday will be a cool, windy day with heavy, blustery showers in the northwest, whilst it'll get brighter in the south after a damp start. The brighter weather will continue on Wednesday with just a few showers in the north.
