++ Valid for broadcast at 0858

Here is the forecast for the United Kingdom until dawn tomorrow:
A much better day than Saturday with many areas staying dry with spells of sunshine. Though there will still be a few showers, especially around southwest Scotland, Northern England, through the Midlands and around East Anglia, with a few heavier ones around Cheshire and Manchester. Dry for many overnight, with wind and rain arriving in the west by dawn.

Outlook for Monday and Tuesday:

After a dry and bright start for some eastern areas, strong winds and heavy rain already in the west will gradually spread eastwards through the day. Drier for many by Tuesday with sunshine and showers, most of these in the north.
